- 3. With the exception of the appointment of Kundakov, a Russian, as Minister of Internal Affairs, the new appointments do not appear to indicate that the changes are directed toward a further russification of the government. These changes seem to be directed rather toward bringing forward the new generation of experienced Lithuanian Communists, for the purpose of improving the efficiency of the government apparatus and its work in the important fields of internal affairs (police and state security), agriculture, light industry, and culture (intellectual matters and information) in Soviet Lithuania. Guzevičius, for example, is regarded as a trustworthy Lithuanian Communist, and his new appointment gives him the task of organizing the still more centralized cultural life of Lithuania. Filipavičius is a young, and apparently able, Lithuanian Communist who has hitherto held various posts in the Party, but not in the government. Augustinaitis and Penkauskas, both Lithuanians, have retained their posts.
- It is not yet clear how far and how deep these administrative changes will be extended in order to achieve the improvement of efficiency in government and industry, to abolish bureaucracy and overlapping, and to centralize certain branches of the industrial and governmental machine.
